INTRODUCTION

This issue of the Population Education Accessions List is an output from our computerized bibliographic data base using the Micro CDS/ISIS system. The Accessions List is being generated three times a year in three formats: printed format, diskette format, and via e-mail. In addition, it can be viewed on our web site: http://www.unescobkk.org/infores/rechpec

The list categorizes the entries into three parts:

Part I - Population Education consists of titles dealing with various aspects of population education arranged by country in the first section and general materials in the second section.

Part II - Knowledge Base Information consists of titles that deal with the different multidisciplinary aspects of population education. These entries are grouped into sections of the following major multidisciplinary topics:

1. Documentation
2. Environment and environmental education
3. Fertility and family planning
4. Reproductive health
5. Adolescent reproductive and sexual health
6. Health
7. HIV/AIDS
8. Information and communication
9. Migration, urbanization and human settlement
10. Population and sustainable development
11. Demography
12. Gender equality, equity and empowerment of women

Part III - Audio-visual and IEC materials consist of titles of various kinds of audio-visual and IEC aids (films, slides, charts, kits, videotapes, etc.) dealing with both knowledge base and population education aspects.

Part IV - Appendices consist of List of Publishers and Sources, Subject Index, Author Index, and Geographical Index.

Each entry or title is given a running number and bibliographical references that include: (i) either the author or corporate author; (ii) title; (iii) imprint; (iv) collation; (v) subject key words; (vi) country key words; and (vii) classification number. In addition to these, a source code is also given. The source code is an abbreviation of the name of the organization where a particular title can be acquired. For the complete names and addresses of the source codes, kindly consult the List of Publishers and Sources given in the Appendices.

Training workshops for the development and implementation of life skills programmes: part 3 of the document on life skills education in schools. Geneva, WHO, 1994. 126 p.

These workshop materials and trainer's guide form part three of a set of materials to guide the development and implementation of life skills education programmes in schools. They should be used in conjunction with the first two parts, which are presented separately: Part 1 & 2, "Life skills education in schools: introduction and guidelines to facilitate the development and implementation of life skills programmes" (MNH/PSF/93.7A). This third part is primarily for the use of those who will be involved in the promotion of life skills education, the development of life skills programme materials and the training of life skills trainers. The reader can use, adapt and build on these workshop materials to design training courses for the development of life skills education.

Population and environment dynamics, poverty and quality of life in countries of the ESCAP region. New York, United Nations, 1997. 195 p. (Asian population studies series; no. 147)

This study of interrelationships between population, resources, environment and sustainable development is an attempt to increase the understanding of these factors and thus enable a better balance between human needs on one hand and population, resources and development on the other, all the while helping governments in their efforts to improve the quality of life of their people. It helps in overcoming some of the gaps with regard to the impact of population growth on natural resources. These issues are not always dealt with in other studies because of a lack of knowledge and awareness of the interlinkages involved. This study brings out the findings of a number of experts focusing especially on the situation in four countries of the region: Bangladesh, Indonesia, Nepal and the Philippines.

A self-esteem and personal future-focussed intervention programme to promote condom use by female sex workers in Thailand. Nakhon Pathom, Institute for Population and Social Research Mahidol University, 1997. 137 p. (IPSR no. 220)

The report consists of five chapters: Introductory Chapter One presents the rationale and objectives of the project. This is done by reference to both, a summary, general overview of the HIV/AIDS and commercial sexual situation in Thailand, and a re-cap of some of the key findings from the investigative, first phase of this programme and the ways in which these informed and shaped the development of the intervention. Chapter Two presents the development of the intervention, identifies its final contents and format, and describes the research design which was used to evaluate it. Chapter Three describes the evaluation of the intervention. As well as discussing the major findings from the analysis this chapter also highlights important factors which affected its implementation and evaluation. Chapter Four presents the main conclusions from the project, reflecting upon some of the broader socio-political aspects of HIV prevention in the sex industry in Thailand as well as the more specific operational research and programme implications. The final chapter also notes the plan for further dissemination of the intervention package throughout Thailand. The Appendix includes a paper on the backgrounds and vulnerabilities of the Non-Thai sex workers in the study.

Post-abortion family planning: a practical guide for programme managers. Geneva, WHO, 1997. 84 p. (WHO/RHT/97.20)

This manual has nine chapters. The first provides a rationale for post-abortion family planning programmes, stressing the need to give these women the knowledge and the means to avoid another unwanted pregnancy. Chapter two identifies six essential elements of high quality care and reviews specific practices that needlessly restrict the contraceptive options available to these women. Clinical concerns are addressed in chapter three, which concentrates on medical problems, including complications of abortion. A detailed chapter on counselling advocates a problem solving approach, lists essential questions that need to be answered, and discusses the special needs of adolescents who have undergone an abortion. The second half of the manual opens with a description of several interconnected components of service delivery, such as equipment, supplies, clientflow, staffing, referral, and costs, that managers must oversee. The remaining chapters discuss each of these components as they apply to services devoted to the emergency treatment of abortion complications, to general family planning services, and to services providing induced abortion and menstrual regulation.

Paper presented at the Seminar on Issues in Monitoring and Measuring Maternal Mortality, UNFPA CST Conference Room, Wednesday, 29 April 1998.

The paper points out the question of "Why should be a concern about measuring maternal mortality?" It gives information showing the relationship between population size and indicator sensitivity, cause of maternal deaths in Fiji, traditional sources for data on maternal deaths, using of indirect techniques to measure demographic characteristics, the sisterhood questions, indirect estimate of maternal mortality in Papua New Guinea. It also presents the model based estimates of maternal mortality and the UNFPA proposed maternal health indicators.

Reproductive health training for primary providers: a sourcebook for curriculum development; Module 3. Providing family planning services. Chapel Hill, NC, INTRAH, 1997. 211 p.

This sourcebook is a modular training resource intended to help trainers integrate aspects of reproductive health into training curricula. Provides practical solutions for developing a performance-based curriculum for training primary providers to offer high quality, client-oriented, integrated reproductive health care services. It consists of 8 modules and 1 user's guide. Each module includes detailed analysis of a specific RH job, the related tasks, skills and knowledge required for providers to perform the job, as well as assessment tools to evaluate trainee achievements, and a reference list. Materials in the sourcebook are adaptable to specific field needs. This Module 3 contains the components for developing a curriculum or a curriculum unit on providing family planning services. Such services include: providing family planning for women at different life stages, as well as in various life situation; managing side effects and other problems possibly related to contraceptive method use; partially managing and/or referring for complications that cannot treated at the service site; and referral to other needed health care or social services.

Adolescent attitudes toward family size in India: the impact of gender, culture, and values. New York, Department of Rural Sociology, Cornell University, 1998. 14 p. (Working paper series; no. 98.04)

A questionnaire containing items on desired family size was administered to about 15,000 secondary school students in three states of India. Mean desired number was 1.9, with a slightly higher figure for males in all three grades (9-11) and in all three states (Uttar Pradesh, Harayana, and Rajasthan). Results were roughly confirmed by use of a non-numeric measure of attitudes toward family size. Multiple regression analysis showed that culture (state), sex education, and general values regarding male dominance and religion were the key explanatory variables.

Guide to implementing TAP: teens for AIDS Prevention Project.
Washington, D.C., Advocates for Youth, 1990. 144 p.

This manual is a step-by-step guide to implementing a Teens for AIDS (TAP) programme in a school or community-based organization. It is intended as an adaptable resource for many different settings in which a TAP programme can be developed. It identifies and covers the key components essential in creating a successful TAP programme. The steps are outlined through the following chapters: 1. Introduction presents and overview the need for HIV and AIDS education and the effectiveness of peer education; 2. Building support highlights the importance of laying the groundwork in a school or community, the chapter outlines ten reasons to implement TAP and presents arguments to counter possible opposition to the programme; 3. Getting started focuses on programme planning, budgets, and funding as well as a job description and tips for the programme coordinator and the explanation on how to recruit youth participants; 4. Activities describes some educational efforts that TAP members can design and implement and suggests approaches to supporting their efforts; 5. Taking the message to the media provides basic guidelines on how to interact with the media; 6. Resources presents a listing of educational materials - videos, curricula, pamphlets and books for additional information.

Overseas migration and the well-being of those left behind in rural communities of Bangladesh. Asia-Pacific Population Journal 14(1): 43-58, March 1999.

This article reveals that the flow of remittances, along with the diffusion of secular values, are the key processes through which various forms of migration operate to improve the socio-economic well-being of the household members left behind. It argues not only that the flow of remittances contributes to raising economic well-being but also that the social and cultural aspects of overseas migration have the potential to modify the livelihood and behaviour of the sending communities through the interaction of secular ideas with traditional values.

Overview of population and development issues in the Pacific: challenges and opportunities in the Post-ICPD Era. Suva, Fiji, UNFPA Country Support Team for the South Pacific, 1998. [11] p.
Paper presented at the Ministerial Meeting on Pacific Response to the ICPD Programme of Action, 23-24 November 1998, Tanoa Hotel, Nadi.
Organized by United Nations Population Fund and the Government of the Fiji Islands.

This paper briefly assesses the current population and development context in the Pacific, discusses the significance of population variables in sustainable development, and highlights future key actions that need to be taken by governments and development partners to further implement the recommendations of Programme of Action adopted at the International Conference on Population and Development so that there will be a major impact on and contribution to the quality of life of the people of these island nations in the years to come.

Trends in health and ability to work among the older working-age population / Eileen M. Crimmins, Sandra L. Reynolds and Yasuhiko Saito. Tokyo, Nihon University, 1999. p. S31-S40. (NUPRI reprint series; no. 72)
Reprinted from "Journal of Gerontology", Vol. 54B, No. 1, January 1999, pp. S31-40.

This article investigates trends in health and work ability among the older working-age and early retirement-age population (aged 50 to 69) during the 1982 to 1993 period. Three questions are addressed: Is there evidence of improving work ability in the older working and early retirement ages? Are any trends in work ability the same for subgroups of the population? Can any trends be explained either in terms of the composition of the population or the prevalence of underlying health conditions?

The impact of married women's labor supply on the distribution of family income in Japan / Naohiro Ogawa and John Bauer. Tokyo, Nihon University, 1999. 29 p. (NUPRI research paper series; no. 66)

This paper analyzes, heavily drawing upon micro-level data gathered from the 1994 round of the National Survey on Family Planning, the changing pattern of employment of married Japanese women and the impact of their earnings on family income inequality. The next section of the paper describes (i) how Japanese married women have changed their labour supply and work status over time, and (ii) to what extent their earnings have improved relative to their male counterparts in recent years. Section III deals with a brief description of the source of data and the methodology to be used. Section IV discusses the extent to which Japanese wives' earnings have an equalizing effect on the distribution of family income, as viewed from their life-cycle stages, and the factors which affect the impact of women's earnings on income distribution. The final section summarizes major findings and examines potential future trends.

The 1994 International Conference on Population and Development, agreed that international donors should contribute one third of the $17 billion needed annually by the year 2000 for population and reproductive health programmes. UNFPA projects a continued financial shortfall would likely lead to over 100 million additional unwanted pregnancies during 1995-2000, resulting in hundreds of thousands of maternal deaths, millions of infant deaths and tens of millions of abortions.

Fertility transition in the Islamic Republic of Iran: 1976-1996. Asia-Pacific Population Journal 14(1): 21-42, March 1999.

This article analyses data related to the Iranian fertility transition that took place during the period 1976-1996. The study found that the demographic factors behind the decreasing crude birth rates are lower exposure to marriage through an unprecedented increase in the female age at marriage and decreases in marital fertility. The fertility decline is explained by demand and ideational factors including a broad reduction in infant mortality and persistent economic pressure. The increase in the educational level of women of reproductive age has also played a role. The most important ideational factor is the changing social atmosphere about having smaller families and using contraception. There is every indication that the declining fertility trend will continue; however, it is estimated that about 12 million women will be added to the age group 15-49 during the period 1996-2006, which could result in a "baby boom" in the next decade.

Active life expectancy of the elderly in selected Asian countries / Vicki L. Lamb. Tokyo, Nihon University, 1999. 22 p. (NUPRI research paper series; no. 69)

This research examines the active life expectancy of the elderly, i.e., persons aged 60 years and older, from selected countries in Asia. For each country, the age-specific prevalence of functional disability will be used to calculate active life expectancy. Countries will be compared in the proportion of total life expectancy that is estimated to be free of disability, for males and females, at various ages.

(Population and development working paper series; no. 2)
Paper presented at the Policy Seminar on Gender Aspects of Population and Development in South-East Asia, at Bangkok, 1-4 September 1998.

The aim of this paper is to discuss the position of Malaysian women in development process and to ascertain their status. Comparison is also made with women in other Asian countries to see if there are differences in women's status across societies in the region. The paper begins with an introduction on the Malaysia nation and its general socio-economic characteristics. The ensuring discussion is divided into five main sections covering women's status and position in different aspects of life. The approach undertaken is to compare the position of women vis-a-vis men and to determine whether women's position has been improving or deteriorating over the years. The main intervening gender issues which affect women's quest towards gender equality are also highlighted. The five main areas discussed are as follows: 1) Demographic profile including family formation, fertility, family planning and mortality; 2) Education attainment; 3) Labour force participation; 4) Migration; 5) Economic and cultural issues.

New directions for the study of women and environmental degradation. Washington, D.C., International Center for Research on Women, 1995. 32 p. (ICRW working paper; no. 2)

This paper presents the findings from a comprehensive review of the available literature on the costs to women of environmental degradation. As a precursor to presenting the review's findings, discussion first focuses on the potential impacts of environmental degradation on women, given women's environmentally-linked agricultural, income-earning, and family health roles. Next, the review's findings in terms of the quality, coverage, and conceptual and methodological strengths and weaknesses of existing studies are presented. The paper concludes with a call for more multidisciplinary, gender-disaggregated research that integrates concerns about the effects of environmental degradation on women into a wider range of environment and development initiatives.

Women in development: current situation and emerging policy concerns in the Philippines. Bangkok, ESCAP, 1999. 45 p. (Population and development working paper series; no. 3)

Paper presented at the Policy Seminar on Gender Aspects of Population and Development in South-East Asia, at Bangkok, 1-4 September 1998.

This paper presents the circumstances of contemporary Filipino women in pursuing both their reproductive and productive roles. The first part of this paper provides a descriptive analysis of a mix of survey and census data on major spheres that shape the conditions for women's active participation in development and determine women's share in the benefits derived from development. The second part of the paper discusses existing legislation that bears on the connection between women and development. More specifically, discussion is related to policies addressing issues of women empowerment and gender equity and how those affect women's roles in overall socio-economic development. On the whole, the paper should be treated as a first step in moving from the level of principles to a level of examination of evidence, which can provide policy directions in the midst of recently emerging views on women, population and development.

Women in development in Singapore. Bangkok, ESCAP, 1999. 53 p. (Population and development working paper series; no. 4)
Paper presented at the Policy Seminar on Gender Aspects of Population and Development in South-East Asia, at Bangkok, 1-4 September 1998.

This paper addresses the theme of women in development in Singapore from the sociological perspective of stress generated by conflicting role expectations. It is divided into four sections. A brief background on relevant socio-economic and demographic features of Singapore is provided in the first section. The main factors or contradictory signals of women's role in development are described and discussed in the second section, followed by the analysis of the struggle and striving for coherence in the third section. The fourth or concluding section summarizes the main findings.

Sisters [booklet]. Wellington, New Zealand, YWCA, 199?. 23 p.

This is a booklet about "Healthy Choices - Nga Kowhiringa Totika". It's about thinking about yourself and your feelings. It's about how to handle yourself when you're going out with someone. It's about things to consider if you're thinking about getting intimate. It's about decisions you'll need to make if you have chosen to start having sex and some advice about where to go if things get difficult. Mostly its about taking control and getting the most out of a time in your life when things can change quickly and keeping a hold on yourself can be hard.

Open up, listen up!: communicating with youth about sexuality [kit].
Washington, D.C., Advocates for Youth, 1997. 1 packet.

Open up, listen up! is a packet of educational materials, pamphlets, resources and activities which will help parents, care givers, and teachers answer children's questions about sexuality and use "teachable moments" to convey values and beliefs. One packet has been developed for parents of 8-13 year olds and another for parents of 14-18 year olds. Also an excellent resource for parents and professionals, including members of faith communities, who plan and offer sexuality education for adults.

Live your dreams: a collection of original compositions dedicated to young people [tape cassette]. Manila, Philippine Center for Population and Development, [1999]. 1 tape cassette. In English or Tagalog.

Produced by the Philippine Center for Population and Development (PCPD) for the Revitalized Homeroom Guidance Program (RHGP) of the Bureau of Secondary Education - Department of Education, Culture and Sports (DECS-BSE).

With Financial assistance from the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA).

This tape cassette is a collection of original composition dedicated to young people. It consists of four songs with vocals and without vocals as following: 1) RHGP: Mithiin at pangarap; 2) He and she; 3) Follow your dreams; and 4) Reach for the rainbow. These songs show that there is no any differences between adolescent boys and girls except physical body. They also encourage the adolescents to follow their dreams and have a bright future.

This videotape tells the story of our population future. It uses the Plan of Action, an agreement forged at the United Nations Cairo Population Conference, as a way of introducing the issue. The central goal of this fast-paced programme is to paint a vivid picture of where the world stands today in this "race between education and catastrophe." The videocassette includes exclusive interviews with a dozen of the world's foremost population and environmental leaders. Interviews include: Tim Wirth, Under Secretary of State and formal US Senator; Nafis Sadik, General Secretary of the Cairo Conference; and Paul Ehrlich, author of "The Population Bomb.".

Jam Packed: the challenge of human overpopulation [videocassette] / produced by Gregory Molina, Geoffrey Holland and Michael Tobias. Ben Lomond, CA, Video Project, [1999]. 1 videocassette; PAL; 29 min.; sd., col. Accompanied with a teacher's guide.

Jam Packed produced by and distributed under the auspices of Population Communications International. It is awarded first prize in the "Earth Vision '98 Environmental Film and Video Competition". The video along with the teacher's guide, addresses the consequences of our planet's explosive growth in human numbers and offers solutions to the problem. Host Alexandra Paul, star of Baywatch, explores how individuals affect our world through their choice of family size, buying habits and use of resources. It looks at the population crisis from a young adult point of view. The decisions teenagers make today about their sexual and consumptive behaviour will have a profound impact on their children and grandchildren. It encourages teenagers to look at their own behaviour, and through self-examination, learn to make choices that will lead to a healthier lifestyle and a positive future for our planetary home. The accompanied guide includes basic information concerning overpopulation, suggested classroom activities, and a variety of population resources for further research.
